Mind Full, or Mindful?
Mindfulness

is the capacity to pay attention to the present moment, just as it is, with awareness and acceptance. It arises naturally when we let go of all the things we usually do with the mind and tune-in to our present experience. It allows us to become more aware, less reactive and have more choice in how we respond to thoughts and mood states.

Mindfulness is Not

- State to be achieved
- Relaxation
- Stopping of all thoughts
- Being on automatic pilot
- Multi-tasking

Mindful Meditation: Training the Mind
- Intention: Reduce stress, increase wellbeing
- Attention: Focused, open, calm
- Follow breath
- Return to breath
- Mind wanders
- Attitude: Kind, curious

Be Here Now

Harvard Wandering Mind Study
- Used iphone app to collect 650,000 real time reports:
  - How do you feel?
  - What are you doing?
  - Are you thinking about something other than what you are doing?
  - Are those thought pleasant, unpleasant or neutral
  - 47% of the time, the mind is wandering
  - People are less happy when they’re mind-wandering no matter what they’re doing.

(Killingsworth and Gilbert, 2010)

Mind/lessness
- Automatic Pilot
  - Thinking about one thing while doing another
  - Mechanical
  - Lost, caught, carried away in thought
  - Mental “hijacking”
Mindfulness Based Eating Awareness Training for Binge Eating
(Kristeller, Wolever, Sheets, 2013)
- RCT with MB-EAT group, CBT group and WLC
- 150 subjects with obesity and BED
- 12 week program
  - Mindfulness training
  - Mindful eating skills
- Measures pre, post, 1 and 4 month up
- Both trx groups improved at 1 month w reduced binge eating and depression; at 4 month 95% MB-EAT group (vs 76% CBT) no longer met criteria for BED

Are You Ready for a Mindfulness Based Approach to Healthy Eating?
1. Are you motivated for a pro-active approach to increasing self-awareness?
2. Are you willing to let go of the expectation that something outside of you will change you?
3. Are you able to accept a gradual approach to changing your relationship to food and eating?

Guidelines for Mindful Eating
- Begin the meal with three deep breaths.
- Tune in to now: how hungry are you?
- Curiously Attend: sights, sounds, tastes
- Slowly Savor: rate taste satisfaction
- When you notice you have started to drift into thought, let go, bring your attention back to eating
- Pause frequently, tuning in to taste satiety and to signals of fullness.
- Trust you can stop when you are satisfied and notice the JOY of mindful eating

Responding vs Reacting

Without Mindfulness: Stimulus → Reaction
With Mindfulness: Stimulus → Mindfulness → Response

RAIN: Being with Cravings
- Recognize what’s here
- Allow and Accept
- Investigate with curiosity
- Note and Name

Letting Go and Beginning Again
- Diet mentality says: “I blew it,” or “I’ll start tomorrow”
- Best predictor of future behavior is past behavior
- Challenge “all or nothing” negative thinking
- Accepting the moment as the antidote
- Look and Learn
- What am I getting out of this behavior?
- Recover from a mindless episode sooner

Learning from Lapses: Non-Judging

Self-Compassion
- Self-hate, guilt and shame become triggers to mindless eating
- When we care about ourselves we can care for ourselves
- Cultivate acceptance, beginners mind, patience, trust
- Compassionate Body Scan
Shifting: Mindless to Mindful

- Avoidance to approach
- From thoughts to sensations
- Living in past, future to living in present
- Striving to non-striving
- Conceptual experience to direct experience
- Automatic to intentional

Mindfulness Training:

- Regular formal practice (10-30 minutes a day)
- Informal practice by bringing mindfulness to daily activities
  - Mindful Eating everyday
  - Daily activities
  - Mindful moments throughout the day
