CRIMINOLOGY

CRM 3001 – Justice and Society
This course examines the U.S. criminal justice system from a sociological perspective. Sociological theories of social control and the origin of law are used to frame important issues of criminal justice and social policy. The most current studies are reviewed on the effectiveness of rehabilitation, decriminalization, deterrence, incapacitation, and various police initiatives. The major components of the criminal justice system (police, courts, and corrections) are analyzed with attention to possible tensions between due process and crime control, bureaucratic efficiency and adversarial checks-and-balances, and the law in theory and the law in practice. Finally, this course emphasizes the importance of understanding the criminal justice system as one of many social institutions relevant for crime reduction, and furthermore, stresses the ways in which effective criminal justice policy is contingent on the vitality of other social institutions (family, school, community, and economy).

THEOLOGY

THL 5000 - Law and Religion

What is the meaning of Jefferson’s infamous “wall of separation” between church and state? Does the First Amendment protect prayer in public schools and crèches in public holiday displays? Does the Free Exercise Clause protect conscientious objection to the draft or using otherwise unlawful substances for sacraments? Does the word “God” in the Pledge of Allegiance or financial aid to Catholic schools amount to an unconstitutional Establishment of religion?

Revised 05.09.2018
The intersection of law and religion in the American constitutional experience continues to present interesting and complex questions for scholars, lawyers, government officials, and students. This course will introduce students to the theories underlying America’s constant debates about the limits of free exercise and what amounts to an impermissible relationship between the state and organized religion. We will read the writings of the Founding Fathers and American political figures like Madison, Jefferson, Adams, and Lincoln, judges and Supreme Court justices, and the work of religious freedom scholars. The class will reflect on theories of religious freedom, the history of the First Amendment religion clauses, current Supreme Court doctrine regarding the Free Exercise and Establishment Clauses, and compare the American experience of religious freedom to other democratic systems. Finally, the course will engage the Catholic Church’s unique relationship to religious freedom in American society. Students from all colleges and majors are welcome to register for the course.
